Brownstone Technology Solutions Launches Four Resource Centers & Blogs
Website visitors can now view articles, white papers, and blogs on BTS website

(Redondo Beach, CA—October 8, 2009...) Brownstone Technology Solutions launches four online resource centers concentrating on point of sale systems, video surveillance systems, IT forensics and IT security. Users can now access a single destination to view a wide variety of industry-related information via news, articles, white papers, and blogs. Visitors can go to www.brownstonets.com and access all information at no cost.

CEO Randy Bragg says, “The resource centers provide relevant information on the many different industries which BTS serves. The resource portals are extremely user-friendly, and we are excited to connect with current and potential customers in an interactive way. After trying to find industry-related information in a variety of platforms, we thought it would be advantageous to create one portal where users can access all relevant information instead of having to visit many different sites.”

The resource centers offer product and service information as well as academic articles. Each resource center contains its own blog which addresses many different topics within a specified industry. The POS and VSS resource centers feature hardware and software information as well as tips when purchasing these products, and the IT forensics and IT security resource centers address information on viral security and digital artifacts. Content is submitted by BTS personnel and users can suggest content for the blogs. The resource centers were designed to be contemporary, user-friendly, and interactive.
